Think about your family, your friends, and your friends' families. Who uses computers the most in their free time? A group of researchers (1) this question to more than 1000 people, and the answer was teenagers. But what are teenagers using computers to do? They are helping to create all the stories and pictures that (2) online!

Teenagers are not writing stories for famous websites. Instead, they are writing their own stories for their personal websites. Or ⁽³⁾they are helping their friends set up websites so that those friends can put their stories and photos online. This is how teenagers are adding to the information people can find on the Internet.

The researchers (4) did the study of teenagers and their families also found other interesting points about teenage computer use. In the survey, 33% of teenagers said that they have shared photos, videos, or art online or have written (5) online. That is equal to one out of every three teenagers in the survey group! The same number, one out of every three, said that they have created or helped to create a website. Many of these websites are personal websites, but some of the websites are also part of their homework for school.

Another thing ⁽⁶⁾[①online ②teenagers ③that ④is ⑤do ⑥many] visit blogs. A blog is a special kind of website with lots of stories on it. It is kind of like an online diary. The person who makes the blog usually talks about his or her daily life or writes about his or her feelings that day. Almost half of the teenagers in the survey said that they regularly read blogs. But only 20%, one out of every five teenagers, say that they regularly write a blog.

There is one more thing that teenagers said that they often do online. In the survey, the researchers found that 50% of teenagers had experience sharing and downloading music online. (7), less than 20% of adults said that they had ever shared or downloaded music. Is downloading music a bad thing? Some people think so. They think it is (8) because singers or bands are not getting paid for their work when teenagers share music for free. In the survey, most teenagers said they understood that this was not right. However, the teenagers also said nobody could stop it, so they would keep sharing music for free.
